Sibelius calculates the time position (timecode) of every bar and the total duration of the score to high precision - useful for film/TV scoring, or for any work which requires timings. Timecode is written above barlines and shown as a digital clock during playback, taking into account tempo marks, irregular bars and rits/accels.

Staves behave just as intelligently - Sibelius can optimize the space between them to allow room for low/high notes, lyrics, tempo markings and rehearsals marks. It adds extra space between instrument families to make large scores easier to read, and saves space between other staves that don't have much on them.
