Zoo Otsuichi

One or two more books like ZOO and I'm going to have a new fave author. Otsuichi is one of the newer dark fiction authors out of Japan. He is hard to categorize as his short fiction spreads throughout many genres including horror, science fiction and mystery.

Zoo by Otsuichi - Goodreads

Zoo is aptly named, besides it a short story in the book, as it is filled with a mix of interesting horror themed stories. Some stand out above the others; my favorites being "In a Falling Airplane" and "In a Park at Twilight, a Long Time Ago". Otsuichi never fails to deliver twists and turns in an horrifyingly entertaining way.

Zoo Quotes Showing 1-6 of 6 "The more one loves, the heavier the meaning of death becomes, and the deeper the sense of loss. Love and death are not different things, they are the front and back of the same thing." — Otsuichi, Zoo

Zoo Quotes by Otsuichi

Zoo consists of eleven short horror stories told in a fashion only Otsuichi can create. The title story, Zoo, is first. It's more of a psychological horror. Readers enter the mind of a man who receives a picture of his dead girlfriend in the mail everyday, watching her decay over time while he insists to himself that he is the murderer.
